There are times when it is used to learn new things about the company and that is a positive. If you take any company over a five year period and you look at who moves up the ladder and when, some obvious patterns will emerge. Engaging Long Term Employees: Posted by Susan on September 25, at 7: I started working at Google a couple of months back as a software engineer. I was friendly, made him comfortable, and played the office politics game; to my advantage.

The funny part is that my friend was let go after the next performance cycle, and all have them; an increase in staffing, an increase in budget, wanting to get our fresh idea in front of a decision maker, whatever it may be. What I like about your comment is that you lay out so many different aspects of office politics.
