The vast laser-driven sails envisioned by Robert Forward have always fired the imagination. The latter, the authors note, could continue for a few decades more to study the environment at the Sun's gravitational lens some AU from Sol, providing a useful check on Einsteinian general relativity. The important thing to remember is that we still have no actual proof of concept. Suraj marked it as to-read Mar 13,

I've been reading this book on the side in between homework and classes. Cox, M. uncurling space sails, dealing with desorption, or controlling nanobots, this book provides many challenges and lots of promise for the future but also recognizes a need for a lot of effort to reach maturity.
