The later you wait to have these talks, the more likely your child will be to form misconceptions or become embarrassed about or afraid of physical and emotional changes. How much time should my child really spend online? They need to know how to clean up after themselves.

I hear stories of parents wrestling with kids to get phones, and all that does is
Dr Richard Graham says this kind of behaviour can crop up at stressful moments for children: Your doctor or a local counselor, psychologist, or psychiatrist can help you find proper counseling.

As teens mature, they start to think more abstractly and rationally. Don't always remember the motto of many parents with teens:
