Others save with fear; urging the terrors of the Lord. He guards them against seducers by a further description of their odious character: One would think to be once dead were enough; we none of us, till grace renew us to a higher degree than ordinary, love to think of dying once, though this is appointed for us all.

There were a great number of the angels who left their own habitation; that is, who were not pleased with the posts and stations the supreme Monarch of the universe had assigned and allotted to them, but thought like discontented ministers in our age, I might say in every age they deserved better; they would, with the title of ministers, be sovereigns, and in effect their Sovereign should be their minister-do all, and only, what they would have him; thus was pride the main and immediate cause or occasion of their fall. Such walk after their own lusts; their will, their appetite, their fancy, are their only rule and law. Keep yourselves in the love of God, v. Clouds they are without water, which promise rain in time of drought, but perform nothing of what they promise.
