But what third view is there? For when a Greek hears it spoken in Latin, he does not feel delighted, for he does not know what has been spoken.

But in pleasing themselves they displease thee every much, not merely taking

Chapter XV He entreats God, that whatever useful things he learned as a boy may be dedicated to. It is not with a doubtful consciousness, but one fully certain that I love thee, O Lord. Is it, perhaps, that one finds his joy in this and another in that? O Love, O my God, enkindle me! Chapter V That man knoweth not himself wholly.
